 Malachy Browne
Syria - 23 Aug 2013

Re Ghouta massacre, the Russian foreign ministry has referred to "reports circulating on the Internet" that "materials (i.e. evidence) of the incident... had been posted for several hours before the so-called attack".

We cannot confirm what reports the ministry refers to. However, there has been ~~some confusion about the time at which videos were uploaded to YouTube.~~ Videos are dated on YouTube with US Pacific time, and videos uploaded in the early hours of August 21 were displayed on YouTube with an August 20 date.

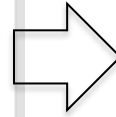

At Storyful, we extract the precise date and time of upload from YouTube videos as we add them to our system. The first video we have seen relating to the massacre was uploaded at 2:50:47am on August 21 local time in Syria. This is approximately 20 minutes after the attacks are reported by eyewitnesses to have happened. The video was uploaded by a YouTube account active in the Erbin area, an uploader Storyful is familiar with and whose videos have been verified in the past.

Very quickly, other videos and photos documenting similar scenes were uploaded to YouTube and other social media sites. If you have documented the first online posts referring to the event, please share here. We will update this thread as we investigate.
